Tobermory 25yo

"Sherry Wood"

Another winner from Tobermory, this time in a more mature expression that smoothens (but doesn't completely tame) the edges of the traditionally robust and bold spirit, and which once more showcases the good interplay of this fine island malt with the flavours of second fill sherry casks. The typically oily character of Tobermory and its earthy and vegetal flavours are unmistakable, backed by a very muscular body. Liquorice, a hint of tarry boat coating (as if to remind of the maritime influence), and then of course the winey fruitiness from the sherry cask: it's not loud and tannic, but it enhances the malt with notes of sultana raisins, a lively hint of peachy sourness, and candied orange peel. Refined and complex, but not wimpy, because Tobermory will always be a span-hearted malt.
